

University of Nebraska - Lincoln

DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln

10th Annual National Conference (2005):
Different Perspectives on Majority Rules

People of Color in Predominantly White Institutions

November 2005

Preferential Treatment and the Demands of Fair Competition

Edward R. Abplanalp

Doctoral Student, Department of Philosophy, University of Nebraska-Lincoln

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.unl.edu/pocpwi10>

Part of the Race, Ethnicity and Post-Colonial Studies Commons

Abplanalp, Edward R., "Preferential Treatment and the Demands of Fair Competition" (2005). 10th Annual National Conference (2005): Different Perspectives on Majority Rules . 1.
<https://digitalcommons.unl.edu/pocpwi10/1>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the People of Color in Predominantly White Institutions at DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln. It has been accepted for inclusion in 10th Annual National Conference (2005): Different Perspectives on Majority Rules by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln.

Preferential Treatment and the Demands of Fair Competition

Abstract

The issue of the fairness of many current affirmative action policies stands in a necessary juxtaposition with the relationship citizens have with each other in the U.S. free enterprise system. Although it is the case that many of today's affirmative action programs that involve preferential treatment are flawed and morally unjustified as they stand, it is not the case that no strong affirmative action policy is morally justified. By appealing to historical facts and basic intuitions about fair competition, I present a cogent counterfactual argument that suggests that, due to the competitive nature of our present society, some forms of affirmative action are necessary to make the assumed background institutions of our society fair. Specifically, affirmative action policies that involve preferential treatment should be managed on a case-by-case basis by considering the life and family history of each candidate. Although cumbersome, this approach would be one of the fairest ways to comply with the reasonable demands of compensatory justice.

Edward. R. Abplanalp

Doctoral Student, Department of Philosophy, University of Nebraska-Lincoln

Presenter

Edward Abplanalp is a Philosophy graduate student at the University of Nebraska – Lincoln. He received his M.A. in Philosophy from UNL in 2001. He is currently working on his Ph.D. (AOS: Ethics). Edward teaches courses in philosophy, ethics, religion, business ethics, and logic at The University of Nebraska – Omaha, The College of Saint Mary, Metropolitan Community College, and Nebraska Methodist College.